BUSINESS DESCRIPTION
Gamescape was established in September of 1985 by Robert J Hamilton. It was one of a few retail businesses on Divisadero Street at the time. Robert envisioned the business as a place where the local community and gaming enthusiasts alike could gather and enjoy the world of tabletop gaming. The business is renowned for the selection of games it offers for purchase, as well as providing an event space for tabletop gaming and tournaments.

The store consists of several departments, including board games, role playing games, classic games, family games, miniature games, playing cards, mechanical puzzles and jigsaw puzzles. The 1990s saw commercial growth in the Western Addition with many new businesses finding opportunities in the neighborhood. During that time, games like Magic The Gathering, Dungeons & Dragons and Warhammer took hold within the gaming communities in San Francisco. Gamescape strived to support those communities by providing space to host the games, as well as offering the products to play the games. Throughout the early 2000s, the gaming landscape continued to evolve with the resurgence of the European strategy games and the classic game of poker. Within the last 10 years, tabletop games have reached a point of cultural phenomenon with all genres of gaming being fully supported, whether by designers and producers or players and communities. As the neighborhood's landscape changed over the decades, so did the hobby gaming industry, and with that Gamescape has filled the demand for the need of a friendly, local gaming store.

The business is located on the west side of Divisadero Street between Oak and Page streets along the Divisadero corridor.

The area exhibits a predominant "Victorian-era" and "Edwardian-era" architectural character, and includes styles such as Italianate, Stick-Eastlake, Queen Anne, Craftsman, and Edwardian.

- Gamescape has been mentioned numerous times in local media. The San Francisco Bay Guardian throughout the 1990s and early 2000s awarded Gamescape as "Best Game Store" at which to shop (photos of plaques included). San Francisco Magazine published two stories on Gamescape, one depicting the subcultures of San Francisco and the other listing the store in the category of "the best places to shop in SF."

Program Manager, Legacy Business Program
Dear Colleagues,

I am pleased to nominate Gamescape, located at 333 Divisadero Street for the Legacy Business Registry. Gamescape is a family-owned game store located in District 5’s Western Addition Neighborhood. It has served the neighborhood for over 34 years – providing a place where community members and gaming enthusiasts can gather together to enjoy the world of tabletop gaming.

Since opening in September 1985, the business has provided a large selection of exclusive tabletop games for purchase and remained welcoming and open to gaming enthusiasts as an event space for tabletop gaming tournaments. Gamescape also remains an engaged and contributing neighbor in the Western Addition. The owner, Robert J. Hamilton and his staff are regular sponsors of the North of the Panhandle Neighborhood Association’s (NOPNA) annual block party. They have also hosted game tables at the annual Peace Festival in the Buchanan Mall, and in June of this year they donated boxes of games to a local non-profit during a fundraiser held in conjunction with Divisadero’s Art Walk.

Gamescape’s commitment to the art and culture of tabletop gaming, to the Western Addition Community, and to District 5 ought to be commended – and including them in the Legacy Business Registry is the perfect way to do so.

It is for these reasons that I am proud to nominate Gamescape to the Legacy Business Registry. If you have questions related to this nomination, I can be reached by phone at: (415) 554-7630 or by email at: brownstaff@sfgov.org.

Sincerely,

Vallie Brown

Name (Print): Thomas Hamilton  Date: 8/9/2019  Signature: [Signature]
Gamescape was established in September of 1985 in San Francisco's Western Addition neighborhood by Robert J Hamilton. Robert envisioned the business as a place where the local community and gaming enthusiasts alike could gather and enjoy the world of tabletop gaming. Located on 333 Divisadero Street between Oak and Page streets, Gamescape has continuously operated since its grand opening without any extended closures or changes in location. The business is renowned for the selection of games it offers for purchase, as well as providing an event space for tabletop gaming and tournaments.

Gamescape is Robert's second business involving tabletop games. After moving to San Francisco from New York in the early 1970s, he quickly realized, when in search of chess books, that San Francisco did not have a proper game store for him to visit. Having a passion for chess and backgammon, Robert decided to embark on opening the first game store in San Francisco on Kearny Street called "Gambit" in 1974. Mainly a chess and backgammon store, Robert promoted the hobby by organizing tournaments at local hotels. Gambit had been in operation for over 10 years, but after the closure of Gambit due to partnership disagreements, Robert took on the task of opening another game store as a sole proprietor.

In the mid 1980s, Robert continued searching the city for an ideal location for his business, then saw an opportunity in a building located on Divisadero Street in the Western Addition. Using the money he saved from driving a cab while also borrowing money from his mother, he convinced the landlord to do much needed renovations to the ground level space at 333 Divisadero Street. Once the renovations were complete, Robert opened Gamescape in September of 1985, making the store one of a few retail businesses on Divisadero Street at the time.

Robert's vision for Gamescape revolved around offering the best and highest quality games available, as well as providing a space to host events for games and tournaments. The store consists of several departments, including board games, role playing games, classic games, family games, miniature games, playing cards, mechanical puzzles and jigsaw puzzles. As time passed, the store continued to stock popular games that attracted gamers and shoppers alike to Divisadero Street.
The 1990s saw commercial growth in the Western Addition with many new businesses finding opportunities in the neighborhood. During that time, games like Magic The Gathering, Dungeons & Dragons and Warhammer took hold within the gaming communities in San Francisco. Gamescape strived to support those communities by providing space to host the games, as well as offering the products to play the games. Throughout the early 2000s, the gaming landscape continued to evolve with the resurgence of the European strategy games and the classic game of poker. Within the last 10 years, tabletop games have reached a point of cultural phenomenon with all genres of gaming being fully supported, whether by designers and producers or players and communities. As the neighborhood's landscape changed over the decades, so did the hobby gaming industry, and with that Gamescape has filled the demand for the need of a friendly, local gaming store.

With the success of the San Francisco location, Robert was able to expand his business to two other cities, San Rafael and Palo Alto, during the late 1990s and early 2000s. While those two locations were successful in their own right, over time the Palo Alto store shuttered and the San Rafael location was sold for financial reasons. Robert retained the San Francisco location due to the fact that he enjoyed working at the store and he was a resident of San Francisco.

Serving generations of San Franciscans, Gamescape has committed to the community it calls home by offering the best the world of tabletop gaming has to offer and by providing an event space for community members where they could congregate. Gamescape plans on continuing the legacy of uniquely San Francisco establishments run by San Franciscans.

b. Describe any circumstances that required the business to cease operations in San Francisco for more than six months?

Not applicable.

c. Is the business a family-owned business? If so, give the generational history of the business.

Robert Hamilton is the sole proprietor of Gamescape and has operated the business for the last 34 years. His son, Thomas Hamilton, has worked at the store as a manager since 2009.

d. Describe the ownership history when the business ownership is not the original owner or a family-owned business.

Not applicable.

e. When the current ownership is not the original owner and has owned the business for less than 30 years, the applicant will need to provide documentation of the existence of the business prior to current ownership to verify it has been in operation for 30+ years. Please use the list of supplemental documents and/or materials as a guide to help demonstrate the existence of the business prior to current ownership.
Robert Hamilton remains the sole proprietor of the business and has owned and operated Gamescape for the last 34 years.

f. Note any other special features of the business location, such as, if the property associated with the business is listed on a local, state, or federal historic resources registry.

The historic resource status of the building at 333 Divisadero Street is classified by the Planning Department as category A, Historic Resource Present with regard to the California Environmental Quality Act.

The building is located in the Eligible Buena Vista North Historic District. The neighborhood north of Buena Vista Park consists primarily of two- and three-story residential buildings that were constructed during the late 19th and early 20th century. A few churches and institutional properties are additionally located in the district. The area exhibits a predominant "Victorian-era" and "Edwardian-era" architectural character and includes styles such as Italianate, Stick-Eastlake, Queen Anne, Craftsman and Edwardian. The area also exhibits a unifying pattern of development that results from construction of primarily wood-frame, wood-clad detached residential buildings that are two to three stories tall and located on long, narrow residential lots. Most dwellings are located at the fronts of lots, with minimal or no front yard and/or side yards. Buena Vista Park was established in 1867 when San Francisco’s Committee on Outside Lands reserved the 36-acre, steeply sloped hill as the first official park in the City’ system. As soon as Golden Gate Park was established, the City began planning the area around the park, including the Panhandle in 1870. In 1883 the Haight Street Cable Car line, an extension of the Market Street Railway, was established, making the park and surrounding neighborhood accessible to residents. Visitors were also attracted to Paul Boyton’s amusement park “The Chutes,” which was located along Haight Street between Clayton and Ashbury streets from 1895-1902. In the 1890s, residential development flourished in the area as the result of the transportation and infrastructure improvements nearby. The 1906 Earthquake and Fire forced residents from downtown into the outlying neighborhoods, and the neighborhood experienced another development boom after the disaster. The area became a temporary refuge and a permanent home for San Franciscans seeking a safer place to live. By 1915, the district was nearly 100% built out.

a. Describe the business's contribution to the history and/or identity of the neighborhood, community or San Francisco.

When Robert first opened Gamescape in 1985, Divisadero St was not known as the commercial corridor it is now. Being one of the few retailers on Divisadero St at the time, the store represented the neighborhood's potential to be a destination for residents from other parts of the city.
During his years at Gambit, Robert started some of the first organized backgammon tournaments and chess tournaments in San Francisco, creating an event for local residents in which to participate. To this day, Gamescape hosts weekly events at the store, continuing the tradition of tabletop gaming within the city.

Being a direct descendant of the first game store in San Francisco, Gamescape is known for being a groundbreaker in the hobby retail industry. Since 1985, Gamescape quickly grew a reputation of being a friendly local game store on Divisadero Street where people could sit down and play games. Throughout those years, hobby gaming has grown within the city and now has become a widely accepted subculture.

b. Is the business (or has been) associated with significant events in the neighborhood, the city, or the business industry?

Locally, Gamescape has been a sponsor of NOPNA’s (North of the Panhandle Neighborhood Association) annual block party. The store has also hosted a games table at the Peace Festival in the Buchanan Mall, which is an event that promotes peace, health and unity. In June of 2019, Gamescape donated boxes of games to a local non-profit called the OTTP (Occupational Therapy Training Program) during their fundraiser held in conjunction with Divisadero's Art Walk.

Within the tabletop gaming industry, Gamescape hosts Free RPG (Role Playing Game) day which is an annual event held in June. The event allows for people new to the genre to learn more about what an RPG is and to participate in a campaign. Another event Gamescape hosts annually is International Tabletop Day which is also held in June. International Tabletop Day is an event that celebrates tabletop gaming with open games for people to play and meet new players. In May of 2019, Gamescape was a primary sponsor for Kublacon, which was held at the Hyatt Regency in Burlingame. Kublacon is the largest tabletop gaming convention west of the Mississippi.

c. Has the business ever been referenced in an historical context? Such as in a business trade publication, media, or historical documents?

Gamescape has been mentioned numerous times in local media. The San Francisco Chronicle annually published a holiday games listing "the best board games of the year," and Gamescape was often mentioned as a place to purchase those games. The San Francisco Bay Guardian throughout the 1990s and early 2000s awarded Gamescape as "Best Game Store" at which to shop (photos of plaques included). San Francisco Magazine published two stories on Gamescape, one depicting the subcultures of San Francisco and the other listing the store in the category of "the best places to shop in SF."

In July of 2019, SFGate published an article titled "How does an SF board game store exist in a digital world?" And in May of 2017, SFGate listed Gamescape as "The Best Places to Shop in the Western Addition." Following are links to the two SFGate articles:
d. Is the business associated with a significant or historical person?

Over the years, notable people have been patrons of Gamescape as well as participants in events. Robin Williams was a frequent customer who was always interested in the latest miniatures Gamescape had to offer. Hunter Pence, in the years he was playing for the Giants, was known to participate in Gamescape's Fright Night Magic (a collectible card game.) Lucille Ball participated in backgammon tournaments that were organized by Robert Hamilton in the late 1970s. Sean Astin, actor in the Lord of the Rings Trilogy, has been a patron of Gamescape throughout the years.

e. How does the business demonstrate its commitment to the community?

Gamescape demonstrates its commitment to the community by being an active participant in community affairs, whether it be through donating boxes of games to local schools and nonprofits, hosting weekly game nights at the store for community members to participate in or donating funds to local causes.

Gamescape often sends a representative to local merchant's meetings and neighborhood association meetings to offer input and to gauge what the local sentiment is at the time.

f. Provide a description of the community the business serves.

The community Gamescape serves is a diverse combination of avid gamers, casual gamers, local residents and families, local businesses and organizations, tourists and those who are interested in learning more about the gaming hobby. The demographics of the average customer varies since gaming is such a widely participated hobby. The hobby gaming community has grown immensely in recent years, and Gamescape has continued to provide the most relevant store to that community by stocking the latest games and offering industry insight to those who seek it. The Western Addition has also changed a lot over the years from being a neighborhood mainly populated by residents to a significant commercial corridor for the city. Throughout those years, Gamescape has adapted to the demands by upgrading store fixtures and infrastructure to reflect the vibrant nature of the neighborhood.

g. Is the business associated with a culturally significant building/structure/site/object/interior?

There are several culturally significant features of the business that make it uniquely a San Francisco entity. One feature is the logo of Gamescape. The logo is a silhouette of the San Francisco skyline circa 1985. The logo is represented several times on the exterior of the store, the most prominent of which is the locally handmade sign that suspends over the sidewalk of Divisadero Street. The other two forms of the Gamescape logo are situated on the two main windows of the store: one window has a hand painted version of the logo, while the other window displays a neon sign version of the logo.

Another feature that defines the business is the interior setting of the store, specifically the hardwood floors and the high ceilings. The setting for the retail space provides the ambiance of shopping inside an early 1900s Edwardian building which cannot be replicated in the modern styled buildings. The Divisadero corridor is aligned with buildings built in the early 1900s, and that is one of the main reasons for the appeal the neighborhood has.

h. How would the community be diminished if the business were to be sold, relocated, shut down, etc.?

If the store were to close its doors, the community would be diminished because there would be one less uniquely San Francisco business run by San Franciscans available to residents. Also, people generally enjoy shopping at game stores, and a unique shopping experience would be missed. An open event space accompanied by a free-to-use gaming library would no longer be available for community members to use. A closure of the store would result in one less place of gathering for residents.

Gamescape is one of a handful of hobby shops still operating in the city today. Gaming stores in specific are rare, and gaming hobbyists would have one less destination in San Francisco to visit. Gamescape employs seven people, so if the store did close there would be seven fewer jobs available in the city.

a. Describe the business and the essential features that define its character.

The essential features of Gamescape that make the business unique is its dedication to offering the best products and service the industry of tabletop gaming has to offer. We pride ourselves in the customer service that is offered, as well as maintaining an inventory of high quality games that are available to purchase on any given day. The store was envisioned to represent all the genres of tabletop gaming in order to be known as "an all-around game store."

Located in a historic Edwardian building built in the early 1900s, the store has the ambiance of shopping in a uniquely San Francisco setting. The store is also open 362 days of the year, which allows the establishment to be relied upon within the community.

Another essential feature that defines the store is the open gaming space that is available to anyone interested in playing or learning tabletop games. Unlike a bar or a restaurant, there isn't any upfront costs of walking to Gamescape and picking up a board game and enjoying it with friends. This makes the event space inclusive to all income brackets and ages, as well as being a safe place for people to convene.

b. How does the business demonstrate a commitment to maintaining the historical traditions that define the business, and which of these traditions should not be changed in order to retain the businesses historical character? (e.g., business model, goods and services, craft, culinary, or art forms)

The business is committed to maintaining its historical traditions as one of the first game stores in San Francisco. Those traditions are a commitment to community, a commitment to maintaining a safe space that is open to everybody and a commitment to informing people of the best qualities that tabletop gaming has to offer. All of these traditions are demonstrated on a day to day basis by offering events for people to join, having consistent store hours that can be relied upon and having an inventory of quality items while offering our best advice/service on any given question or request.

c. How has the business demonstrated a commitment to maintaining the special physical features that define the business? Describe any special exterior and interior physical characteristics of the space occupied by the business (e.g. signage, murals, architectural details, neon signs, etc.).

Satanic Bay Area
Target audience: Athletes/agnostics, political activists, performance artists
No, they don’t eat babies. Founded in 2015 as a grassroots atheistic group to fuel left-wing political action, Satanic Bay Area’s members say they invoke the Prince of Darkness as a way of subversion of mainstream religion. But that doesn’t mean you won’t find black robes, candles or invocations being recited at one of its Black Masses. “A lot of people’s ideas about Satanism are influenced by pop culture,” says Simone C., who declined to give her full name. “So we decided to go with it.” Once a month, the group meets at Wicked Grounds coffee shop to plan some uniquely devilish activism. Recently, some members protested Brett Kavanaugh’s appointment to the U.S. Supreme Court by holding a “curse-a-thon.” For every dollar donated, with proceeds going to Planned Parenthood, the group pledged to fax a letter embedded with a curse to Kavanaugh supporters in the Senate. They raised $666.

Spinsters of San Francisco
Target audience: Young professionals, unmarried women
Cast aside your notions of decrepit old women obsessed with crocheting and cats. A social nonprofit made up of professional, unmarried women between the ages of 21 and 35, Spinsters of San Francisco has been fostering female fellowship in the Bay Area for nearly 90 years. “When the group was created, it was common for unmarried women in their mid-to-late 20s to be considered spinsters,” says SOSF’s Claire Callahan. “We take pride in the term ‘spinster’ because we have so many accomplished, worldly and ambitious women as members.” Today, the group continues its founding members’ legacy of volunteerism and fundraising. This February, members will gather for a gala at the Fairmont San Francisco to support La Cocina, a kitchen incubator program that works with chefs, primarily women and people of color from low-income backgrounds, to break into the food industry.

Biohackers San Francisco
Target audience: Health and wellness enthusiasts, science nerds
If you’ve ever relied on your morning cup of coffee to jump-start your day, you’ve already flirted with biohacking. With local chapters from Minneapolis to Moscow, Biohackers Collective provides a platform for perfectionists obsessed with optimizing their health and productivity—from edge-seeking entrepreneurs trying brain-boasting supplements to tech-savvy athletes. For the most part, the members of Biohackers Collective aren’t part of the “grinder” community, the DIY cyborgs splicing magnets into their fingertips and RFID tags under their skin. “It’s a misconception that we’re doing something complicated or super-risky,” says Thomas Melching, who organizes the collective’s San Francisco chapter. “We do a lot of research before trying anything.”

Gamescape
Target audience: Role-playing fanatics, board game aficionados
While not a subculture in itself, tucked away in the Lower Haight, Gamescape has been building a reputation as San Francisco’s friendly neighborhood board game store since 1985. But, if you stick around after buying the latest expansion for Cards Against Humanity, you might find yourself transported to another world entirely. On Tuesday nights, fledgling Pokemon trainers draw their best holographic Charizard card for the store’s weekly Pokemon League. On Fridays, they travel to the multiverse and duel other Planeswalkers in Magic: The Gathering. And, on Wednesday nights, up to 60 players, both newbies and role-playing vets alike, roll some dice and spin a good yarn as part of the store’s weekly Dungeons & Dragons conclav. “People get into the storytelling and the role-playing,” says Gamescape’s Tom Hamilton. “It breathes a lot of life into the store.” Just try to steer clear of the Demogorgon.

Bay Area Skeptics
Target audience: Scientific skeptics, lovable pedants
If you keep finding yourself wagging a disapproving finger at that friend who insists on peddling the latest pseudoscience trends and cargo cult science, you may want to check out Bay Area Skeptics. “We’re not skeptical of science: we’re all science fans,” says Eugenie “Genie” Scott, president of the local interest group. “We’re skeptical of extraordinary claims.” Following in the footsteps of renowned eyebrow-raisers like Carl Sagan, Isaac Asimov and Stephen Jay Gould, the San Francisco skeptical community has challenged everything from ghosts to astrology since 1982. Each month, the group’s recurring SkepTalk series brings a new brainy expert to Berkeley’s La Peña cultural center to debunk a different misconception. Last year, it tackled the top 10 myths about homelessness.

San Francisco Bay Area Curling Club
Target audience: Winter sports devotees, aspiring Olympians
Yes, curling is very much a thing in the Bay Area. With curlers spanning several different clubs from Silicon Valley to Oakland, the sport attracts both competitive curlers and recent converts. “In the Bay Area, you have a ton of curlers who are 30-somethings,” says Jay Diamond of the San Francisco Bay Area Curling Club. “They’ll really do curling as counterculture, so they’ll come onto BART with their curling brooms.” Earlier this fall, the SBACC leased a property in Oakland to build the state’s sole dedicated curling facility.
How does an SF board game store exist in a digital world?

By Drew Costley, SFGATE
Updated 10:58 pm PDT, Sunday, July 7, 2019

Tom Hamilton, shown here, is the owner of Gamescape in San Francisco. He took over the store, which has been open since 1985, from his father in 2009. The store, which features mostly analog games, thrives in an increasingly digital world. Photo: Drew Costley/SFGate.
In 1985, Nintendo launched its Nintendo Entertainment System gaming console in North America in what’s remembered as a watershed moment for video games. That same year, San Francisco resident Robert Hamilton invested in hobby games, which are largely analog, when he opened Gamescape in the Western Addition.

It was a bit of a gamble. Gamers were getting more into video games like Super Mario Bros. and Excitebike, and he already had a game store, Gambit — which he opened in the 1970s — close on him.

But Hamilton, who was into hobby gaming himself, was determined to open a store where people who shared his interest could get the latest board games, card games, puzzles, and equipment for their tabletop role playing games.

In addition to that he wanted to create a community around hobby gaming that shared values like “inclusiveness, openness and being forthright and truthful ... and being genuine,” said his son Tom, who was born the same year the store was opened.

Hamilton’s investment ended up paying off. The store is going on its 35th year in the same location on Divisadero and Oak, in an increasingly digital world. The video game industry has grown to a $43 billion industry and mobile gaming is projected to grow to $106.4 billion by 2021, according to industry analyst Newzoo.

And there are stores like Razer, a video game store in Westfield Mall, and arcade bar Emporium, that's right down the street on Divisadero, creating spaces for gathering and community around digital games.

So how does a store like Gamescape manage to stay open in one of the world's most digital-friendly regions, especially one that's been drastically transformed by the wealth brought in by companies profiting off of digital technology?

It turns out the store has been one of the beneficiaries of the tech boom, according to Tom, who took over the business from his father in 2009.

"When you have a person who has more discretionary income, they're able to invest in their interests a little bit more," he said. "And it just so happens that a lot of people who have come into the region and have made some money are into hobby gaming ... We were sort of in the right place at the right time for this."

He said he thinks many of his older customers who make a living in tech are drawn to hobby games because they grew up with them, and because they offer a change of pace from their 9-t0-5.

"I also think that the face-to-face aspect of board games and tabletop gaming has an appeal with a lot of the tech customers because you know a lot of people want to get away from the screens and want to sort of unplug," he said. "So analog gaming does that and you're able to meet people while tabletop gaming."

Gamescape and lots of businesses like it in the region — Games of Berkeley and It’s Your Move in the East Bay, Gamescape North in the North Bay, and Gator Games in the South Bay — offer lots of opportunities for people to build community through gaming.

Each night of the week at Gamescape is dedicated to a different type of hobby game: Mondays are for playing more traditional board games like Monopoly or Settlers of Catan; Pokémon cards is on Tuesdays; Dungeons & Dragons is on Wednesdays; Magic the Gathering is on Fridays.

The front of the store has bookshelves filled with games and puzzles organized by genre of game. Cooperative games are in one section, two-player games in another and classic board games in another. Beyond those sections, in the back of the store, there are several long tables where people congregate for the different game nights.

On the Friday before San Francisco’s Pride Parade, the store’s gaming tables were nearly full of players competing in a Magic the Gathering tournament. The people playing in the tournament range in age from their preteens to middle age. The crowd is mostly male and mostly white, but it's more diverse than a lot of other social spaces in the Bay Area, especially in this part of San Francisco.

Players diligently passed out cards from a new set released by Wizards of the Coast, a popular game publisher that sanctions the tournaments at Gamescape and sponsors the game nights, but they were also catching up on each others' lives, sharing plans for weekend and cracking jokes.

The store makes a bit of money off of the sponsored game nights, which are free for players, but Tom said the sponsorships aren't the bread and butter of the store. "It sounds pretty simple but ... selling games straight to the customer is our main source of revenue," he said. "I think why a lot of customers come to us is because we have a vast selection and we have the games people are interested in."

Just as video games have developed in complexity over time and expanded into different genres, so have hobby games, which has been key in the growth in popularity of those types of games, according to Tom. The mainstreaming of these types of games due to different pop culture phenomena, like Dungeons & Dragons being played in the Netflix show "Stranger Things" or the popularity of the mobile game Pokémon Go, has contributed to a bump in popularity for hobby games, too.

"Games and gaming were typically associated with people who weren't in the mainstream," Tom said, but as the acceptance of gaming has grown, the popularity of certain games has grown.

He struggled to find another word for "people who weren't in the mainstream," because they're his people, his customers and community.

He didn't want to call them nerds, as many might.

"I don't have that perception about it," he said. "We just like games and we enjoy playing them and having a place to host them."

That's what keeps Gamescape in business — Bay Area residents' love of hobby gaming, the community that's grown over the decades through gaming, and the store's attentiveness to industry trends and customer needs. And though hobby gaming was a $1.5 billion industry in 2018, gaming stores aren't exactly cash cows for the people who own them, especially in an era dominated by e-commerce sites like Amazon.

"Retail now is as tough as it's ever been," Tom said.

"You make enough to survive and live in the neighborhood," Tom said. "But people who open game shops or people who run game shops aren't necessarily in it for making a ton of money. It's more so for the appreciation of the hobby and for the love of the hobby. That you're able to provide a space like this for people in the community is more the driving force of why a person runs a business like this."

BUSINESS DESCRIPTION

Gamescape was established in September of 1985 in San Francisco’s by Robert J Hamilton. It was one of a few retail businesses on Divisadero Street at the time. Robert envisioned the business as a place where the local community and gaming enthusiasts alike could gather and enjoy the world of tabletop gaming. The business is renowned for the selection of games it offers for purchase, as well as providing an event space for tabletop gaming and tournaments.

The store consists of several departments, including board games, role playing games, classic games, family games, miniature games, playing cards, mechanical puzzles and jigsaw puzzles. The 1990s saw commercial growth in the Western Addition with many new businesses finding opportunities in the neighborhood. During that time, games like Magic The Gathering, Dungeons & Dragons and Warhammer took hold within the gaming communities in San Francisco. Gamescape strived to support those communities by providing space to host the games, as well as offering the products to play the games. Throughout the early 2000s, the gaming landscape continued to evolve with the resurgence of the European strategy games and the classic game of poker. Within the last 10 years, tabletop games have reached a point of cultural phenomenon with all genres of gaming being fully supported, whether by designers and producers or players and communities. As the neighborhood’s landscape changed over the decades, so did the hobby gaming industry, and with that Gamescape has filled the demand for the need of a friendly, local gaming store.

The business is located on the west side of Divisadero Street between Oak and Page streets in the Haight Ashbury neighborhood. It is within the Divisadero NCT (Neighborhood Commercial Transit) Zoning District and a 40-X Height and Bulk District.
